When I use ifstream.size() it returns a value of 0. int size; ifstream is("myfile.txt", ios::binary); is.read((char*)&size, sizeof(int)); This gives a value of 0. With is.seekg(0) I get the size properly. Is there a way to get size from is.read()? A: You can't do this. You need to use is.seekg(0) and then is.seekp(is.tellg()) to get the whole thing into memory, otherwise just use is.seekg(0) and is.seekp(0). There isn't any way to get the number of bytes remaining to be read in memory, nor to get the next position to read to. A: If you want to use ifstream::read() you probably want to use is.read() to read the size. std::istream::read If b is not

Sleipnir is a feature-rich and reliable web-browser whose main advantages are a high level of customization and advanced tab functions. The browser gives you the option to choose the Trident (as used by Internet Explorer) or the Webkit rendering engine. The latter is used by default, but you can even define an engine for every website you visit. But its customization possibilities are far exceeding this and while it may seem difficult, all the options are intuitive. Almost any aspect of the browser can be changed, from the address bar behavior, to the bookmarks panel, the page search bar, as well as the user interface. Aside from that, the available plugins and the Chrome extensions are designed to bring extra functionality to the application. One of the most important features of this browser is the use of a cloud service, Fenrir Pass, in order to sync your Sleipnir data and bookmarks. After creating a Fenrir Pass account, you can share the pages you visit with web applications such as Facebook, Twitter, Google+ or Dropbox. Furthermore, the service allows seamless linking with iPhone, iPad and Android devices, which means you can send links, call phone numbers and use the phone's mapping function directly from your desktop browser, provided that the Sleipnir Linker application is already installed on the smartphone. In addition to this, Sleipnir comes with a built-in high-speed feed reader, which enables you to import feeds from Google Reader with a single click. There is a variety of options here too, which range from customizing the article list appearance and filtering to grouping feeds, so that they can also be read offline. The advanced tab functions make the browsing
